

Summary of 2016 Medical Loss Ratio Results

This report summarizes the results of the Medical Loss Ratio (MLR) data submitted by health insurance companies to CMS for group and individual market health insurance coverage in 2016. This year, these health insurance companies paid approximately $447 million in rebates for 2016. (See Figure 1 for rebates by year.) Employers received approximately $153 million in rebates in the small group market and $191 million in rebates in the large group market, while consumers received approximately $103 million in rebates in the individual market. Rebates paid for 2016 will benefit approximately 3.9 million consumers across all three markets. The average rebate per person is $114 in the individual market, $109 in the small group market, and $116 in the large group market.

The Medical Loss Ratio Provision, or 80/20 Rule, of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act applies to health insurance companies providing coverage to almost 75 million consumers¹ who have health insurance coverage either through their employer (known as the group market) or by purchasing their own health insurance (known as the individual market). The rule generally requires health insurance companies in the individual and small group markets to spend at least 80 percent (85 percent in the large group market) of premium dollars collected from consumers on actual health care or quality improvement activities. The rule requires health insurance companies to report financial information including premium revenue and how much is spent on medical care and specified healthcare quality improvement activities versus administrative activities such as salaries and marketing.

In 2011, the average MLR (i.e., the percentage of premiums spent on specified healthcare and quality improvement activities) was 84.1 percent in the individual market, 84.3 percent in the small group market, and 89.8 percent in the large group market. In 2012, the average MLR was 86.1 percent in the individual market, 84.8 percent in the small group market, and 90 percent in the large group market. In 2013, the average MLR was 86.4 percent in the individual market, 84.6 percent in the small group market, and 90 percent in the large group market. In 2014, the average MLR was 85.7 percent in the individual market, 84.9 percent in the small group market, and 90.1 percent in the large group market. In 2015, the average MLR was 91.8 percent in the individual market, 85.6 percent in the small group market, and 90.1 percent in the large group market. In 2016, the average MLR was 92.9 percent in the individual market, 86.1 percent in the small group market, and 90.3 percent in the large group market.

If health insurance companies do not meet the 80 or 85 percent MLR standard set forth in the statute, they are required to pay rebates to the employers in the group markets or consumers in the individual market, refunding the difference. This is based on how the insurance company spent the total premium dollars of all its enrollees in the applicable market in a state, rather than on the premiums and claims of any specific enrollee. In the small group and large group markets, the rebate is generally provided to the employer, who must provide the employee rebates in one of the three ways rebates are provided to consumers in the individual market (described below) or apply the rebate in a manner that benefits employees. In the individual market, rebates are provided directly to consumers in one of the following ways: as a check in the mail; a reimbursement to the account that was used to pay the premium; or a direct reduction in their future premiums. (See Figure 2 for the percentage of consumers insured by companies that met or exceeded the MLR standard.)

Appendix 2: Companies Owning Rebates for 2016

Based on MLR reports filed through October 19, 2017. Does not reflect rebates for Mini-Med or Student Health Plans.

Rebates shown below are owed under Federal law. If a company also owes rebates under State MLR law, generally, the total rebate owed by the company is the higher of either the Federal or State rebate, rather than the sum of the two.
